

Best Learning Intervention and Educational Services For Young Children & Disabilities In VMPS, Fort Mill

Early intervention is a term used to describe programs and resources that can assist young children who are experiencing learning disabilities. It's similar to special education, but it's for babies and toddlers who have fallen behind on cognitive development.

Youngsters from birth to age three can receive care at home or in the community through early intervention. Children may be referred for an early intervention assessment by a medical professional or a daycare provider.

When a child is determined to be eligible, staff from the department's early intervention program collaborates with the parents to create a plan for many availabilities of care given to children and their families.
